This report looks at the following areas:

How Hispanics meet the people that make up their social circles, in addition to the factors that strengthen them, shows how both groups and communities are multidimensional, with trust and familiarity as a foundation. Groups and communities across the US are becoming increasingly multicultural, and Hispanics are both having an influence on and are influenced by other cultures.

"As Hispanics account for nearly 20% of the US population, they are intrinsically present in groups and communities across the US."
