The public sector has long represented a major opportunity for private companies to sell products and services. With effectively no prospect of government spending falling to below 40% of UK GDP in the short term, the market is vast, and the drive for efficient service provision can only intensify with upward financial pressures on critical areas for environmental, social and demographic reasons."

- Terry Leggett, Senior Industrial Analyst

This report looks at the following areas:

- How will expenditure evolve over the next few years?
- Which sectors are being targeted for further reductions?
- With the UK economy growing, where are financial restrictions likely to be relaxed?
- How are the changes affecting the respective roles of services and capital expenditure?
- Where are private sector opportunities the strongest?

For the purposes of this report, UK public expenditure, which covers the government's spending on public services, has been segmented into:

- central government own expenditure
- local government expenditure
- public corporation expenditure
