This report looks at the following areas:

despite demographic pressures. Schools, meanwhile, are getting through political attitude

- How will the market develop over the next five years?
- What will be the key market drivers?
- What sectors offer the best prospects?
- How is government policy affecting the market?
- Will continued competition between universities increase property investment?

Public expenditure on education and health are highly political issues and there are huge disparities in policy between the major political parties and countries that make up the UK, with both sectors being devolved issues. In consequence, any change in the government through a general election would have far more significance than the Brexit decision. There have been fundamental changes in the university sector in the last decade, while restricted public spending has c
